How To Make An Earth Battery:

Earth Batteries:

Yes, you can make batteries out of such simple things as dirt, preferably wet, acidic dirt.

If your soil is not acidic enough, then use urine.

Several of these batteries would have to be connected in series to obtain any useful voltage, but it's free!

The downside is—they would not last long.

You would have to do a lot of work for very little return; but if it is all you have, it might be worth the effort.

Connecting in Series:

When connecting your batteries in Series you are doubling the voltage while maintaining the same capacity rating (amp hours).

This might be used in many applications.

Just use a jumper wire between the negative of the first battery and the positive of the second battery and so on.

Run your negative wire off of the open connector from the first battery and your positive off of the open connector on your second battery and so on.

Connecting in Parallel:

When connecting in Parallel you are doubling the capacity (amp hours) of the battery while maintaining the voltage of one of the individual batteries.

This would be used in applications such as laptop batteries, some scooters, some ups backups, etc. Use a jumper wire between the positives of both batteries and another jumper wire between the negatives of both batteries and so on.

Connect your positive and negative wires to the same battery to run to your application.

Connecting in Series (increases voltage, same capacity [ah])

Connecting in Parallel (same voltage, increases capacity [ah])
